CONCEPT NOTE

"THE MAKING AND UNMAKING OF 20TH CENTURY SOUTH ASIA"

The 20th century witnessed a transformative journey for South Asia, encompassing the creation and dissolution of nations, political upheavals, and socio-cultural shifts that reshaped the region. This seminar explores some of the multifaceted processes involved in the making and unmaking of South Asia during this epochal period. The making of 20th-century South Asia is intricately tied to the struggle for independence from colonial rule. The successful resistance against British imperialism eventually led to the creation of two separate nations in 1947, India and Pakistan, reflecting religious divisions. The partition, however, marked the beginning of complex socio-political challenges, notably the long-standing India Pakistan conflicts and the creation of Bangladesh in 1971. Simultaneously, the region experienced the unmaking of political entities as colonial empires crumbled. The end of British rule in South Asia triggered a series of events that defined national boundaries and identities. Post-independence internal conflicts, ethnic tensions, and separatist movements further contributed to the unmaking of nations within the region. The 20th-century South Asian narrative is a tapestry of historical events, reflecting the struggles for independence, the challenges of nation-building, and the subsequent fractures that altered the geopolitical landscape. The seminar aims to delve into the intricacies of these processes, examining how the making and unmaking of South Asia in the 20th century shaped the destinies of its nations and people.
