The state song or Rajya gaan was sung to initiate and set the tone of the programme. Both teachers and students took part. This was followed by the official address of Dr. Manas Kabi, Principal, Asutosh College. On the opening day, 2nd of January, a series of Students' Welfare Seminars were organized. Issues included Human Trafficking, Gender Equity and Sensitization and Cyber Crime.

Combating human and child trafficking necessitates a multifaceted and coordinated effort on the part of many agencies including government, law enforcement, civil society, and the international community. Victim protection and assistance, as well as proactive steps to address the underlying reasons of vulnerability, are critical components of any anti-trafficking approach. Faculty members from the Department of Journalism and Mass Communication and Sociology delivered the lecture on 'Human Trafficking'.

The session was divided into two major sections. Smt. Jayita Das from the Dept of Sociology spoke on child trafficking issues in India and its major causes. She explained the various social and economic factors responsible for child trafficking. In the second session, Dr. Priyanka Roy from the Department of Journalism and Mass Communication highlighted the problem of human trafficking and gave an overview of the Anti-Trafficking Laws in India. Audio-visual content was also presented which helped students grasp the subject better. Dr. Roy also mentioned how communities may help prevent human trafficking by remaining attentive, reporting suspicious activity, and engaging in awareness efforts. The role of the media in this regard was also highlighted. The sessions were interactive where the students participated actively. They shared their social media usage patterns and habits. Faculty members of the college also agreed on the value of the event and the importance of raising awareness about the issue.

The speakers for the second session on 'Gender Equity and Sensitization' were Dr. Sanchita Sanyal, Dr. Subhasri Ghosh and Dr. Chandrima Bhar, Assistant Professors from the Departments of Political Science, History, and Philosophy respectively. Dr. Sanyal said the introduction of a third gender is a significant step towards encouraging diversity, inclusivity, and recognising the presence of people whose gender identities do not fit inside the standard dichotomy of male and female. Many communities have recognised and accepted the notion of a third gender, often known as non-binary gender, as part of attempts to understand and appreciate the diversity of human experiences.

While giving her speech on The Protection of Children from Sexual Offences Act, 2012, Dr. Subhasri Ghosh said that this is a huge step towards resolving the terrible issue of child sexual abuse in India. It seeks to defend children's rights and hold those who commit sexual offences against them responsible through a specialised judicial process. She explained how the Act outlines a wide range of sexual offences against minors, including sexual assault, sexual harassment, employing a child for pornographic purposes, and penetrative sexual assault.

Dr. Chandrima Bhar during her session said that Creators, media professionals, and society as a whole must critically assess how gender issues are portrayed in various means of communication. Promoting accurate, varied, and respectful portrayals helps to build a more inclusive and equitable understanding of gender. While explaining gender equity issues she also mentioned that the presentation of gender problems shapes public views and attitudes towards gender roles. The media has the ability to affect cultural norms and may be a catalyst for positive change by challenging negative stereotypes and encouraging equality. She also explained gender stereotypes and their changing pattern in recent times, citing examples from advertisements.

Tuesday's programme ended with a cyber awareness programme where Sri Suvankar Chakraborty of the Cyber Cell and SOG (Special Operation Group) units of Kolkata Police, gave advice on how to use social media sites safely and guard against online fraud. In the era of artificial intelligence, indiscriminately publishing photographs on public platforms may aid in reliving memories, but it can also be interpreted as data by cybercriminals, who could harm the person's reputation. During the hour-long lecture, the speaker spoke extensively about Artificial Intelligence (AI), characterising it as a "problem of the future". He presented a short clip of criminals using a 9-year-old's photographs to steal her real identity. Mr. Chakraborty stated that while technology undoubtedly makes life easier, safety is still a must when using it.

He also stressed that parents should refrain from posting excessive amounts of information about their children's accomplishments and activities on social media.

On 3rd January a poster-making competition and debate session were organised. The purpose of the poster-making competition was to encourage students' creative expression and assess their understanding of various environmental challenges. The competition on the topic- 'Pollution and Environment' was to get the students thinking, in addition to evaluating them on their artistic abilities.
