- BRIEF REPORT ABOUT THE EVENT/ PROGRAMME: A seminar titled "How to Write Research Proposals for Funding" was organized for the faculty members of the Department of Computer Science and Mathematics. The event aimed to equip faculty with the necessary knowledge and skills to draft effective and competitive research proposals to secure funding from various national and international agencies. The session was conducted by Dr. Amlan Chakrabarti (Director, A.K. Choudhury School of I.T., University of Calcutta.) in research methodology and funding procedures, who shared valuable insights on identifying suitable funding opportunities, formulating research objectives, writing compelling proposals, and adhering to submission guidelines for project proposal submission to DST, WBDST, CSIR, ICMR, ISRO, SERB etc.

Faculty members actively participated in the interactive session, raising queries and discussing ideas relevant to their fields of interest. The seminar proved to be highly informative and beneficial, fostering a research-oriented mind-set among the participants. The department extends its gratitude to Dr. Amlan Chakrabarti and the organizing team for making the seminar a success.

• EXPECTED OUTCOME: The seminar is expected to enhance the faculty members' ability to identify and approach suitable funding sources, while improving their skills in writing clear, structured and compelling research proposals. Participants will gain greater confidence in navigating the funding application process, which will increase their chances of securing research funding for their projects. Additionally, the seminar will foster stronger collaboration and networking within the academic community, supporting the growth of research initiatives across the department.
