Summary & Benefit of the Programme:

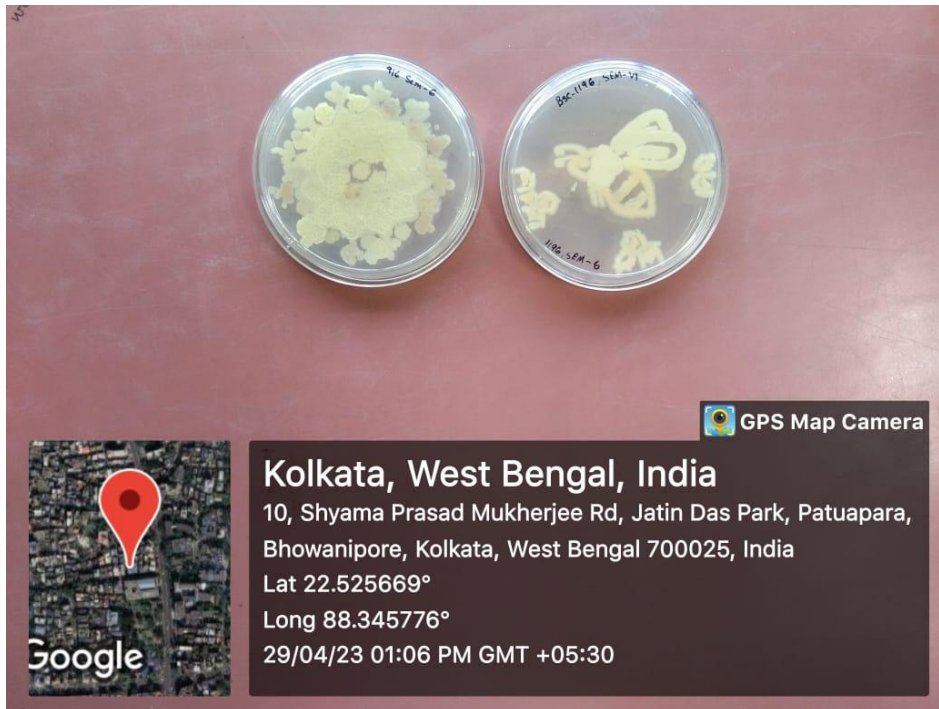

Ever since the Agar Art contest began few years back, educators and scientists from around the world have been using the Agar Art competition as a platform to demonstrate the connection between art and science. This competition had been organized to inculcate creativity and passion for art in young minds.

Students of the Dept. had made various designs and pictographical representations on agar plates with the help of nichrome wire loop. Beautiful drawings and designs were made with bacterial cultures on Nutrient Agar Plates; which reflects innovative idea and thinking of the students. They participated with enthusiasm and zeal. The event nurtured young minds and inculcated the zeal of art and ingenuity and the use of microorganisms from creative viewpoint. They were overwhelmed by the skill of painting with bacteria. The competition had revealed in students, a professional approach of presentation and skill development as well as promotion of active learning and collaboration with peers which promotes the use of art to share, inspire and teach about microbiology. There were a total of 14 participants from Semester IV and 6 from Semester VI.
